Of Mice and Men (and monkeys)

A world and all there in,
Life and love and laughter,
Silver, gold and tin...

In Charlotte Cory's second solo show at the Woolff Gallery, featuring her new collection of Visitorians, we encounter Shakespeare, a monkey (of course) photographed at Stratford in East London. This picture was banned by none other than the Globe Theatre in the year of the London Olympics. There is also an Admiral from Portsmouth (a tawny owl), an autochrome family of mice picnicking in a wood a little in the manner of Édouard Manet's celebrated Dejeuner sur l'herbe, a smartly attired canary girl who clearly knows herself The Favourite, and a several extremely impressive self-possessed wolves who (naturally) cannot be kept away from the Woolff.

No wonder Cory's unique vision is now in collections all over the world, and HM the Queen has two in the Royal Collection of photography at Windsor Castle. You might remember that every time you fly over that imposing historic edifice in a plane.

"...in a small room in Walsall or Penge, while the photographer, black cloth over his head, asked you to watch the birdie. Charlotte Cory's magic makes them not watch, but become, the birdie..."

AN Wilson, 2012

In a new development, we have a special version Charlotte Cory's installation at the gallery attached to Camberwell School of Art to mark the centenary of the armistice at the end of World War 1, "You wouldn't do it to a Badger". An homage to the extraordinary writer and artist, David Jones, who survived four years in the trenches. Cory has created a unique very moving memorial that says something astonishingly new about our relationship to the animal kingdom and to the terrible "war to end all wars".

Not to be missed.
